M Y L O R D,

W H E N first I undertook to write an Dictionary, I had no expectation higher patronage than that of the tutors of the copy, nor prospect of any other ad-than the price of my labour ; I knew, that the in which I engaged is generally considered as one for the blind, as the proper toil of artless industry, task that requires neither the light of learning, activity of genius, but may be successfully per-without any greater quality than that of bear-thens with dull patience, and beating the track alphabet with sluggish resolution.
